Commercial Espresso Machine We suggest a dry, well ventilated work bench, this should be approx 32" 45" high, with 6" clear space around the machine to allow for cleaning and maintaining the machine. Please do not forget to allocate an area for your grinder which is usually on the right side for right handed Baristas. Under the machine you should dedicate an open space of approx 17 x 17 x 12 In w x h x d for your filter and an external motor and pump This is for machines that have external pumps Rancilio do not have external pumps. In order to connect of these up it is advisable to have a 3" hole drilled your bench, for water pipes and electricity cables. This hole should be set for the middle of the machine. Water You need to engage a licensed plumber to install a cold water outlet which is easily accessible. We recommend that the water supply enter low on either side and near to the back surface within 40" of the machine. Power Supply Always use a licensed electrical contractor to connect your espresso machine and grinder.

Your espresso machine will require a 220 240 Volt single phase supply with the specific current protection ratings as per machine specifications. Espresso machines generally have a 40" lead coming out from the rear left side. Therefore the GPO should be located near the left side. Many cafe owners have a power supply installed below the machine in the service area and therefore run the cable from the machine through the hole in the bench for water and drainage. IMPORTANTLY if your power or isolating switches are located in areas affected by water it is compulsory to install weatherproof power switches. Single group domestic home machines require 10A and 110v outlet. The products and services for sale and the Site itself are owned and controlled by the Company.
